1 Plaintiff Paul Ascherl (“Ascherl”), pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(a), respectfully moves 2 this Court for a preliminary injunction enjoining Defendants and their agents, servants, 3 employees, attorneys, and all persons and entities in active concert or participation with them, 4 directly or indirectly, from applying Issaquah City Code § 5.40.040, on its face and as applied, so 5 as to prevent Ascherl and other third party speakers from engaging in peaceful literature 6 distribution on public sidewalks in downtown Issaquah during the 2011 Salmon Days Festival 7 and during all subsequent Salmon Days Festivals.

9 STATEMENT OF FACTS

10 Ascherl is a Christian who shares his religious beliefs with others in public. (Verified 11 Complaint, ¶ 12). To accomplish this goal, Ascherl visits public ways and distributes literature 12 about his faith. (Affidavit of Paul Ascherl, ¶ 3, filed as Exhibit “A” concurrently with Motion for 13 Preliminary Injunction). This medium is an inexpensive and uniquely effective method for 14 conveying information. (Ex. “A,” ¶¶ 4-6).

15 While sharing his message, Ascherl does not engage in any type of demonstration, seek 16 to draw a crowd, ask for money, or try to gather signatures. (Ex. “A,” ¶ 7). He does not force his 17 literature on anyone or create congestion. (Ex. “A,” ¶¶ 9-10). Ascherl typically remains 18 stationary and asks passersby if they would like a Gospel tract. (Ex. “A,” ¶ 11).

19 Ascherl desires in particular to distribute literature while standing on the public ways of 20 downtown Issaquah during the Salmon Days Festival. (Ex. “A,” ¶ 12). The Salmon Days 21 Festival is an annual festival that occurs on the first full weekend of October and celebrates the 22 return of salmon to the lakes, streams and hatcheries in Issaquah. (Compl., ¶ 23). The Festival is 23 presented by the Greater Issaquah Chamber of Commerce with support from the City of Issaquah

2 For the Salmon Days Festival, Issaquah has promulgated rules and regulations, appearing

 4 Chapter 5.40 of the Issaquah Code of Ordinances is being filed concurrently with this Motion as

 6 portion of downtown Issaquah, encompassing the areas where East Sunset Way intersects Front 7 Street, Veterans Memorial Park, the Issaquah Hatchery, and other adjacent areas. (Compl., ¶ 26; 11 remain free and open to the general public, allowing pedestrians to enter at various points. (Ex.

 12 “A,” ¶ 13; Compl., ¶ 26). There are no specific points of entry into the Salmon Days Festival.
 13 (Compl., ¶ 26).

14 The Salmon Days Festival hosts various activities and events. (Compl., ¶ 27). Festival 15 attendees can enjoy exhibits, booths, a parade, a “Foods of the World” exhibition, 5K and 10K 16 runs, live entertainment, and a “Field of Fun event” where children ride ponies, jump on 17 trampolines, and play on inflatables. (Compl., ¶ 27). The Festival booths are available to food 18 vendors, arts and crafts vendors, and non-profit organizations, but anyone renting a booth must 19 pay an application fee, a rental fee, and provide proof of insurance. (Compl., ¶ 28; a true and 20 correct copy of the application and rules to obtain a booth for the 2011 Salmon Days Festival is

3 During Salmon Days Festival, parts of East Sunset Way and Front Street are closed to 4 vehicular traffic, while remaining open to pedestrian traffic, permitting pedestrians free access to 5 these streets and adjoining sidewalks. (Ex. “A,” ¶ 14). East Sunset Way and Front Street 6 maintain their function as public thoroughfares and part of the city’s transportation grid. (Ex.
 7 “A,” ¶ 14). Citizens continue to use these public ways during Salmon Days Festival to reach 8 various parts of the city, including a variety of businesses. (Ex. “A,” ¶ 14).

 10 On Saturday, October 2, 2010, Ascherl and two friends went to downtown Issaquah to 11 express their Christian beliefs via literature distribution and dialogue. (Ex. “A,” ¶ 15). Ascherl 12 chose this place and time because he wanted to reach the large audience attending the Festival.
 13 (Ex. “A,” ¶ 16). At no point did Ascherl attempt to participate in or disturb Festival activities.
 14 (Ex. “A,” ¶¶ 17-19).

 16 When Ascherl arrived downtown, he began walking on Front Street, near where Front 17 Street intersected NE Dogwood St., as he distributed literature and dialogued. (Ex. “A,” ¶ 20).
 18 Ascherl observed many other people walking around and standing in the same area as they ate 19 food, watched festival activities, talked to each other, and waited in line. (Ex. “A,” ¶ 21).

 21 Ascherl engaged in his expressive activity for approximately five minutes when a female 22 Festival official approached him and ordered him to stop distributing literature. (Ex. “A,” ¶ 22).
 23 Ascherl declined and the official left to go get the police. (Ex. “A,” ¶ 22). Ascherl continued to 24 distribute literature for about 30 more minutes until two police officers with the Issaquah Police 25 Department approached him. (Ex. “A,” ¶¶ 23-24). The officers inquired about his literature and

1 wanted to make sure he was not harassing anyone. (Ex. "A," ¶ 25). After Ascherl assured them 2 of his peaceful activities, the police permitted him to continue with his literature distribution.
 3 (Ex. "A," ¶ 25).

4       A few minutes later, though, the police approached Ascherl again, accompanied by the 5 same female festival organizer that spoke with Ascherl before. (Ex. "A," ¶ 26). This time the 6 officers ordered Ascherl to stop distributing literature. (Ex. "A," ¶ 26). Ascherl asserted his right 7 to distribute literature on a public sidewalk. (Ex. "A," ¶ 26). Ascherl also asked about the 8 existence of any law prohibiting his literature distribution. (Ex. "A," ¶ 26). The police officers 9 left, but soon returned, and showed Ascherl a copy of Issaquah City Code § 5.40.040. (Ex. "A," ¶ 10 28). According to the officers, this ordinance prohibited all literature distribution except in two 11 specific "free speech zones." (Ex. "A," ¶ 29). The police officers also advised Ascherl that he 12 would be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to arrest if he continued to distribute literature 13 outside of these zones. (Ex. "A," ¶ 29).

14       Though Ascherl wanted to continue to distribute literature in his chosen location, he did 15 not want to be arrested; so he went to one of the designated free speech zones. (Ex. "A," ¶ 30).
 16 The first free speech zone was located near the intersection of Front St. and Sunset Way, very 17 close to the Front St. Stage where various musicians were playing. (Ex. "A," ¶ 31). Hardly 18 anyone was in or near the area because it was so out of the way, and Ascherl could not converse 19 with anyone because it was so loud. (Ex. "A," ¶¶ 31-32). Unable to convey his message at the 20 first speech zone, Ascherl left for the second speech zone. (Ex. "A," ¶ 32).

21       The second free speech zone was located on West Sunset Way on a bridge near the 22 Issaquah Hatchery and the intersection of West Sunset Way and Newport Way. (Ex. "A," ¶ 33).

1 Like the first speech zone, few people came near this area. (Ex. "A," ¶ 34). Since people can 2 enter the Festival from almost any location, Ascherl missed 99% of the people attending the 3 Festival. (Ex. "A," ¶ 34). After trying to distribute literature in both of the so-called free speech
 4 zones, Ascherl realized that neither space offered a suitable place for his expression. (Ex. "A," ¶ 5 35). Ascherl thus discontinued his activities and left the Salmon Days Festival. (Ex. "A," ¶ 35).

 7 The ordinance used to silence Ascherl, § 5.40.040 of the Issaquah City Code, is entitled 8 "Designated areas for leafleting, entertaining, and nonprofit distribution" (hereinafter "anti-9 leafleting ordinance") and reads:

10           5.40.040 Designated areas for leafleting, entertaining, and nonprofit 11 distribution.

12           A. The City of Issaquah hereby establishes designated "expression areas" within 13 the festival area for leafleting, organized protesting, nonscheduled entertainment, 14 and nonprofit distribution. These designated expression areas shall be located by 15 the Festival Events Division of the Greater Issaquah Chamber of Commerce in 16 such a way as to minimize interference with the orderly flow of pedestrian traffic 17 through the festival area while still providing an area for members of the public to 18 freely express themselves. The locations of the designated expression areas shall 19 be subject to approval by the City Council prior to Salmon Days.

20           B. The Festival Events Division of the Greater Issaquah Chamber of Commerce 21 shall ensure that adequate trash receptacles are located in these designated areas.

22           C. The designated expression areas shall be marked by at least one sign 23 containing the words "expression area" so that police officers and Salmon Days 24 volunteers are able to direct persons wishing to partake of these activities to that 25 area.

26           D. No person shall erect a table, easel, soapbox, stand, or similar structure which 27 could interfere with pedestrian traffic within the festival area, including the 28 designated expression areas, without the written permission of the Festival Events
 Division of the Greater Issaquah Chamber of Commerce.

29           E. No leafleting, organized protesting, non-scheduled entertainment, or nonprofit 30 distribution shall be allowed outside of a booth or the above-established, 31 designated expression areas.

1 F. Violation of this section shall constitute a misdemeanor. Before enforcing this 2 section, police officers shall give a verbal warning informing the violator of this 3 chapter and of the location of the designated expression areas where such 4 activities are allowed. If the violator continues the activity after this warning the 5 police may arrest the violator.

6 G. Nothing in this section should be read to prevent attendees from expressing 7 themselves through purely oral communication at any location within the festival 8 area. Nothing in this section should be read to prevent attendees from carrying 9 signs at any location within the festival area so long as the sign conforms with 10 IMC 5.40.050.

11 This anti-leafleting ordinance deters Ascherl's expression because it bars literature 12 distribution during Salmon Days Festival outside of two remote areas and also because it 13 prohibits anyone from standing on boxes in the free speech zone in order to attract people. (Ex.
 14 "A," ¶¶ 37-38). These requirements impose intolerable burdens on Ascherl's expression, keeping 15 him from effectively distributing literature to his intended audience. (Ex. "A," ¶ 35). For fear of 16 arrest, Ascherl cannot return to public ways of downtown Issaquah during the Salmon Days 17 Festival and distribute literature in areas where he can reach a meaningful audience. (Ex. "A," ¶ 18 38). If not for the anti-leafleting ordinance, and the actions of Defendants in enforcing this 19 ordinance, Ascherl would return to the 2011 Salmon Days Festival and subsequent festivals to share his message via literature distribution and conversation. (Ex. "A," ¶ 38).

20 ARGUMENT

21 A request for a preliminary injunction relates to four factors: (I) the likelihood of 22 Plaintiff's success on the merits; (II) the likelihood of irreparable harm to the Plaintiff in the 23 absence of relief; (III) the balance between the harm to the Plaintiff and the harm that the relief 24 would cause to the other litigants; and (IV) the public interest. Stormans, Inc. v. Selecky, 571
 25 F.3d 960, 977-78 (9th Cir. 2009). These factors favor Ascherl receiving his requested injunctive 1 relief.

2 I. ASCHERL IS LIKELY TO SUCCEED ON MERITS

3 Forum analysis is used to evaluate regulations impacting free expression on public 4 property. This process entails three inquiries: A) the extent to which expressive activity is 5 protected, B) the nature of the forum, and C) the appropriate level of scrutiny to be applied.

7 Currier v. Potter, 379 F.3d 716, 734-35 (9th Cir. 2004).

8 A. Ascherl's Expression Deserves First Amendment Protection

9 Ascherl wants to share his religiously-held beliefs through literature and conversation.
10 (Ex. A, ¶¶ 2-12). These innocuous methods constitute speech protected under the First 11 Amendment. See, e.g., Heffron v. International Soc. for Krishna Consciousness, Inc., 452 U.S.
12 640, 647 (1981) (noting that oral and written dissemination of religious viewpoint are protected 13 speech); Murdock v. Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105, 108 (1943) (explaining that the hand 14 distribution of religious tracts “has the same claim as the others to the guarantees of freedom of 15 speech and freedom of the press...”).
16

17 B. Sidewalks in Downtown Issaquah are Traditional Public Fora

18 The propriety of restrictions imposed on protected speech turns on the character of the 19 property where the speech takes place. Frisby v. Schultz, 487 U.S. 474, 479 (1988) (citation 20 omitted). The Ninth Circuit recognizes three general types of property for speech purposes: 21 traditional, designated, and nonpublic fora. Flint v. Dennison, 488 F.3d 816, 830 (9th Cir. 2007).
22 Traditional public fora are places that, by long tradition, have been devoted to assembly and 23 debate. Id. Designated public fora are areas that the government has intentionally dedicated to 24 expressive activity. Id. Nonpublic fora are areas that have not by tradition or designation been

1 opened to expressive activity. Id.

2 Ascherl would like to express his beliefs on the public ways in downtown Issaquah. (Ex.
 3 A, ¶ 12). These public ways --- sidewalks and streets --- constitute “prototypical” examples of 4 traditional public fora. Schenck v. Pro Choice Network of Western New York, 519 U.S. 357, 358
 5 (1997). To be sure, “[w]herever the title of streets and parks may rest, they have immemorially 6 been held in trust for the use of the public and, time out of mind, have been used for purposes of 7 assembly, communicating thoughts between citizens, and discussing public questions.” Hague v.
 8 CIO, 307 U.S. 496, 515 (1939). See also Hill v. Colorado, 530 U.S. 703, 715 (2000) (noting that 9 “Public sidewalks, streets, and ways...are ‘quintessential’ public forums for free speech.”); 10 ACLU of Nevada v. City of Las Vegas, 333 F. 3d 1092, 1099 (9th Cir. 2003) (“The quintessential 11 traditional public forums are sidewalks, streets, and parks.”); Acorn v. City of Phoenix, 798 F.2d 12 1260, 1266 (9th Cir. 1986) (noting that the Supreme Court has “listed ‘sidewalks’ separately as 13 an additional example of traditional public fora...”). For this reason, no “particularized” inquiry 14 is required for these areas. Frisby, 487 U.S. at 481.

 16
 17
 18 Issaquah is not at liberty to change the status of these public ways. Traditional public 19 fora “are open for expressive activity regardless of the government's intent.” Ark. Educ.
 20 Television Comm'n v. Forbes, 523 U.S. 666, 678 (1998). Traditional public fora cannot be 21 transformed into non-public fora by government whim. “Congress, no more than a suburban 22 township, may not by its own ipse dixit destroy the ‘public forum’ status of streets and parks 23 which have historically been public forums...” United States Postal Service v. Council of 24 Greenberg Civic Ass'n., 453 U. S. 114, 133 (1981). See also United States v. Grace, 461 U.S.
 25 171, 175 (1983) (government may not “transform the character of the property by the

 2 public forum parcel of property."); ACLU of Nevada, 333 F. 3d at 1103-05 (ruling that 3 sidewalk in downtown Las Vegas was still a traditional public forum regardless of city's intent 4 and unique features of sidewalk). Because the public ways in question remain free and open to 5 the public during Salmon Days Festival (Ex. A, ¶¶ 13-14), these public ways remain traditional 6 public fora during the entirety of this event.

7       The Ninth Circuit drew a similar conclusion in Gathright v. City of Portland. 439 F.3d 8 573, 575 (9th Cir. 2006). In Gathright, Portland gave permits to private parties to conduct 9 particular events in a public park and in a town square and allowed these private parties to 10 remove speakers from these areas. Id. In evaluating this issue, the Ninth Circuit applied the time, 11 place, manner standard against Portland's permit scheme --- the standard only appropriate for 12 regulations on expression in a traditional public forum. Id. at 578.

13       With this analysis, the Ninth Circuit is far from an outlier. Every single circuit to consider 14 the issue has concluded that public streets and parks remain traditional public fora during 15 festivals that are free and open to the public. See, e.g., Startzell v. City of Philadelphia, 533 F.3d 16 183, 197 (3d Cir. 2008) ("Furthermore, like the Arts Festival in Parks, OutFest took place in the 17 streets and sidewalks of Philadelphia, an undisputed quintessential public forum. The issuance of 18 a permit to use this public forum does not transform its status as a public forum."); Dietrich v.
 19 John Ascuaga's Nugget, 548 F.3d 892, 879 (9th Cir. 2008) (explaining that "Plaintiff's activities 20 occurred in a traditional public forum" even though activities occurred in public square during 21 permitted festival); Parks v. City of Columbus, 395 F.3d 643, 652 (6th Cir. 2005) (explaining 22 "that one's constitutionally protected rights disappear because a private party is hosting an event

1 that remained free and open to the public. Here, Parks attempted to exercise his First 2 Amendment free speech rights at an arts festival open to all that was held on the streets of 3 downtown Columbus. Under these circumstances, the streets remained a traditional public forum 4 notwithstanding the special permit that was issued to the Arts Council.”).

5 Government entities cannot alter the status of public streets and parks via permitting 6 process. The sidewalks and public ways in downtown Issaquah remain traditional public fora 7 throughout the Salmon Days Festival.

9 C. Anti-Leafleting Ordinance is Overbroad and Not Narrowly Tailored to Any 10 Significant Government Interest

11 The classification of downtown sidewalks and ways as traditional public fora is 12 significant because “[i]n such fora, the government's right ‘to limit expressive activity [is] 13 sharply circumscribed.’” Berger v. City of Seattle, 569 F.3d 1029, 1036 (9th Cir. 2009) (en 14 banc). To be valid, a regulation on expression in a traditional public forum must be content-15 neutral, narrowly tailored to serve a significant governmental interest, and leave open ample 16 alternative channels for communication. Id. Issaquah’s anti-leafleting ordinance, in banning all 17 leafleting in all public areas of downtown Issaquah except for two isolated zones, does not serve 18 any significant interest in a narrowly tailored way.<sup>1</sup>

21

22 <sup>1</sup> Just as Issaquah’s anti-leafleting ordinance lacks narrow tailoring, it is also facially overbroad.
 23 The overbreadth doctrine allows a plaintiff to challenge a law “because of a judicial prediction or 24 assumption that the statute’s very existence may cause others not before the court to refrain from 25 constitutionally protected speech or expression.” Nunez by Nunez v. City of San Diego, 114 F.3d 26 935, 949 (9th Cir. 1997) (citation omitted). Because arguments showing overbreadth and narrow 27 tailoring are so similar, courts routinely treat these arguments together. See, e.g., American-Arab 28 Anti-Discrimination Comm. v. City of Dearborn, 418 F.3d 600, 606 n.3 (6th Cir. 2005) (noting PLAINTIFF’S MOTION FOR PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION-10
 (Case No. -----)

Under the narrow tailoring requirement, regulations cannot “burden substantially more speech than is necessary to further the government's legitimate interests.” Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 798 (1989). A restriction is “narrowly tailored” only if it eliminates no more evil than it seeks to remedy. Frisby, 487 U.S. at 485. And, abstract goals are not enough. “[T]he First Amendment demands that municipalities provide ‘tangible evidence’ that speech-restrictive regulations are ‘necessary’ to advance the proffered interest...” Edwards v. City of Coeur d'Alene, 262 F.3d 856, 863 (9th Cir. 2001) (citation omitted). The availability of less burdensome alternatives indicates a lack of appropriate tailoring. See Santa Monica Food Not Bombs v. City of Santa Monica, 450 F.3d 1022, 1041 (9th Cir. 2006). With this benchmark in mind, Issaquah’s anti-leafleting ordinance fails because it unduly bans all literature distribution in a traditional public forum (public sidewalks and ways).

Issaquah’s anti-leafleting ordinance demonstrates a disconnect between its purported purpose and its impact on expression. Any purported concerns about security, litter, or congestion cannot justify Issaquah’s broad restriction on speech. See Kuba v. I-A Agr. Ass’n, 387 F.3d 850, 859 (9th Cir. 2004) (“merely invoking interests ... is insufficient. The government must also show that the proposed communicative activity endangers those interests.”). There is nothing inherent about the act of literature distribution that would invoke security, litter, or congestion concerns. Issaquah permits a plethora of activities to occur in the Festival area --- waiting in line, standing around and conversing, eating --- that cause just as much – if not more substantial overbreadth claim is similar, if not identical, to a claim that a prior restraint is not narrowly tailored.”). For these reasons, Ascherl can appropriately consolidate these arguments, for by showing Issaquah’s anti-leafleting ordinance to lack tailoring, he also shows the ordinance to be overbroad.

1 – congestion, litter, and safety problems. (Ex. A, ¶ 21). See Lederman v. United States, 291 F.3d 2 36, 45 (D.C. Cir. 2002) (“Some banned activities, however, cannot possibly pose that risk [of 3 traffic control and safety]. For example, a single leafleteer standing on the East Front sidewalk 4 will no more likely block traffic or threaten security than will photographers, star-struck tourists, 5 and landscape painters complete with easels, but the Board has made no effort to keep any of 6 these latter individuals away from the Capitol.”).

7       In Berger v. City of Seattle, the City of Seattle imposed a variety of requirements on 8 individual street performers in one of its crowded public parks. 569 F.3d 1029, 1035 (9th Cir.
 9 2009). Seattle defended its permit requirement as necessary to further “its interest in protecting 10 the safety and convenience of park-goers by reducing territorial disputes among performers, 11 deterring harassment of audience members, and ‘clarifying and coordinating potentially 12 competing uses.’” Id. at 1041. In other words, Seattle tried to justify its regulation as a means to 13 enhance security in the crowded park, but the Ninth Circuit rejected this rationale: 14

15       The permitting requirement is, according to the City, designed in part to reduce 16 obnoxious conduct by street performers. Yet, by the City's own account, most 17 street performers are not problematic. So the permitting requirement burdens all 18 performers to root out the occasional bad apple. By doing so, it fails to “target[ ] 19 and eliminate[ ] no more than the exact source of the ‘evil’ it seeks to remedy.”

20 Id. at 1045-46 (citation omitted). See also Boardley v. U.S. Dept. of Interior, 615 F.3d 508, 522 21 (D.C. Cir. 2010) (“But why are individuals and members of small groups who speak their minds 22 more likely to cause overcrowding, damage park property, harm visitors, or interfere with park 23 programs than people who prefer to keep quiet? We fail to see why an individual’s desire to be 24 communicative is a strong proxy for the likelihood that she will pose a threat to park security or 25 accessibility. No doubt some individuals and small groups will cause these problems, but many

1 will not; and the government has not explained why those engaged in free expression are more 2 likely to be problematic than anyone else.”) (citations omitted).

3 Likewise, there is no question that most people distributing literature at Salmon Days 4 Festival (like Ascherl) do not generate any real concern. (Ex. A, ¶ 20). Banning all literature 5 distribution to “root out the occasional bad apple,” Issaquah’s restriction unnecessarily prohibits 6 a vast amount of activity that is harmless, making Issaquah’s ban overbroad.

8 Bans on literature distribution are routinely invalidated because such bans do not 9 necessarily prevent litter, congestion, or safety problems. In International Soc. for Krishna 10 Consciousness, Inc. v. Lee, for instance, airport authorities banned solicitation of money and 11 literature distribution in an airport terminal in order to minimize congestion in that confined, 12 highly trafficked area. 505 U.S. 672, 675-76 (1992). After the Supreme Court found the terminal 13 to be a non-public forum, and upheld the ban on soliciting money, id. at 680-84, it invalidated 14 the ban on literature distribution. Id. at 690-93.<sup>2</sup> In so doing, the Supreme Court distinguished 15 literature distribution from monetary solicitation, explaining that the former does not create any 16 congestion problem since it “does not require that the recipient stop in order to receive the 17 message the speaker wishes to convey; instead the recipient is free to read the message at a later 18 time.” Id. at 690 (citation and quotations omitted). Surely, if the congestion/safety/access 19 rationale does not warrant a literature distribution ban in an enclosed and crowded airport 20 terminal --- a non-public forum where regulations need only be reasonable --- then that same 21 rationale cannot warrant a ban on literature distribution in a wide open public park --- a 22

26 <sup>2</sup> On this point, Justice O’Conner’s concurring opinion in Lee is the controlling opinion. See, 27 e.g., Preminger v. Sec'y of Veterans Affairs, 517 F.3d 1299, 1316 n.6 (Fed. Cir. 2008).

1 traditional public forum where regulations must overcome a much higher standard. See also 2 Grace, 461 U.S. at 176 (invalidating ban on literature distribution on sidewalk around Supreme 3 Court because such ban not narrowly tailored to prevent congestion or ensure safety); Ward, 491 4 U.S. at 799 n.7 (explaining that literature distribution does not cause “traffic congestion”); 5 Martin v. City of Struthers, 319 U.S. 141, 143 (1943) (“[The right to distribute literature] may 6 not be withdrawn even if it creates the minor nuisance for a community of cleaning litter from its 7 streets.”); Schneider v. New Jersey, 308 U.S. 147, 162 (1939) (“We are of opinion that the 8 purpose to keep the streets clean and of good appearance is insufficient to justify an ordinance 9 which prohibits a person rightfully on a public street from handing literature to one willing to 10 receive it.”); Lederman, 291 F.3d at 43 (“If people entering and leaving the Capitol can avoid 11 running headlong into tourists, joggers, dogs, and strollers...then we assume they are also 12 capable of circumnavigating the occasional protester.”).

13       A festival setting cannot justify a ban on literature distribution. The Sixth Circuit recently 14 confronted this issue in Saieg v. City of Dearborn, 641 F.3d 727 (6th Cir. 2011). There, Dearborn 15 banned literature distribution throughout a street festival, free and open to the public. Id. at 729-16 32. Because of this ban, speakers could not distribute literature on public sidewalks and streets 17 located in the Festival’s “inner perimeter,” but they could distribute literature from certain booths 18 and tables within the festival. Id. Dearborn claimed this ban was necessary to relieve “pedestrian 19 overcrowding,” enhance “traffic flow,” minimize “threats to public safety,” and limit 20 “disorderliness at the Festival.” Id. at 736. The Sixth Circuit declined to follow this logic because 21 the Festival was still “open for public traffic.”

22       The sidewalks may well host more traffic during the Festival than they do on 23 other days of the year. Nevertheless, the defendants have chosen to keep the 1 sidewalks open for public use, showing that the interests in crowd control and 2 public safety are not so pressing that they justify restricting normal activity that 3 occurs on streets and sidewalks. Therefore, because Festival organizers permit 4 public traffic on the sidewalks next to Warren Avenue, the interest in curtailing 5 First Amendment expression on those sidewalks is not substantial.

6 Id. at 737. Just like Dearborn, Issaquah has chosen to keep its Festival open for public use and 7 open to a wide variety of activities that create just as many (if not more) problems than literature 8 distribution. As a result, Issaquah cannot credibly rely on congestion or safety concerns to single 9 out and ban literature distribution only. Ascherl and others should be able to “leaflet from any 10 street or sidewalk that remains open for typical, non-Festival pedestrian traffic, even if the street 11 or sidewalk is simultaneously used for Festival traffic.” Id. at 741. See also Teesdale v. City of 12 Chicago, No. 09 C 4046, 2011 WL 2143027 at *6, 10 (N.D.Ill. May 26, 2011) (enjoining ban on 13 literature distribution on public streets in festival free and open to the public).

14 Nor does the availability of two “speech zones” for literature distribution negate the 15 adverse impact on speech. Issaquah still bans literature distribution in 99% of the Festival area.
 16 The so-called speech zones are not adequate alternatives since they are located in remote areas 17 where hardly anyone travels. (Ex. A, ¶¶ 31-35). See, e.g., Weinberg v. City of Chicago, 310 F.3d 18 1029, 1041 (7th Cir. 2002) (“The mere existence of an alternative method of communication 19 cannot be the end of the analysis. We must also give adequate consideration to whether the 20 alternatives are ample. Whether an alternative is ample should be considered from the speaker’s 21 point of view.”). Allowing expression in two small, isolated “speech zones” pales in comparison 22 to the “anti-speech zones” that cover the rest of downtown Issaquah.<sup>3</sup> Issaquah cannot 23

 25
 26<sup>3</sup> Consequently, Issaquah’s anti-leafleting ordinance also does not leave open alternative avenues 27 of communication. See, e.g., Edwards, 262 F.3d at 866 (“[i]f an ordinance effectively prevents a

1 substantiate its ban on literature distribution by pointing to alternative avenues where 2 communication can occur. See Schneider, 308 U.S. at 163 (“...one is not to have the exercise of 3 his liberty of expression in appropriate places abridged on the plea that it may be exercised in

 5 even if it leaves open ample alternative channels of communication.”); American-Arab Anti-6 Discrimination Comm. v. City of Dearborn, 418 F.3d 600, 607 (6th Cir.2005) (“Lastly, the city
 7 of Dearborn claims that because it has provided ample alternative means of communication, 8 namely Dearborn City Hall and Dearborn parks, the thirty-day notice period does not pose a 9 substantial burden on free expression. However, whether the thirty-day notice period is narrowly 10 tailored is a separate question, to be taken on its own...providing ample alternative means of 11 communication will not cure a defective regulation if Dearborn's thirty-day notice provision 12 sweeps too broadly.”); NAACP v. City of Richmond, 743 F.2d 1346, 1355 (9th Cir. 1984) 13 (“[L]aws regulating public fora cannot be held constitutional simply because they leave potential 14 speakers alternative fora for communicating their views.”). Issaquah must demonstrate that the 15 prohibition on speech is necessary.

16       In Gerritsen v. City of Los Angeles, 994 F.2d 570 (9th Cir. 1993), a city banned literature 17 distribution in certain areas of a public park demarcated by blue lines. Id. at 573-74. Because 21 leave open alternative avenues of communication when those regulations confined speakers to 22 impractical “speech zones.” See, e.g., United States v. Baugh, 187 F.3d 1037, 1044 (9th Cir. 1999) 23 (forcing protestors into free speech zone 150 yards away from those entering visitor center failed 24 to leave open alternative avenues); Bay Area Peace Navy v. United States, 914 F.2d 1224, 1229 25 (9th Cir. 1990) (requiring a 75-yard security zone between demonstrators and intended audience 26 did not leave open ample alternative means of communication).

1 these areas were very crowded and near a consulate building, the city defended the ban as 2 necessary to maintain “a calm, secure environment” and to avoid “congestion in these often 3 crowded areas.” Id. at 577. The Ninth Circuit invalidated the regulation for infringing on too 4 much harmless expression:

5 To the extent that City officials sought to curtail unprotected activity in the blue-6 line areas (such as disruption of other legitimate park activities, the business of 7 the Mexican Consulate, or visitors' enjoyment of the park), the total ban on 8 handbill distribution is substantially broader than necessary. Moreover, City 9 officials already had in place regulations to prevent these behaviors, as indicated 10 by the occasions (some of which are described later in this opinion) when park officials did not hesitate to enforce laws aimed at Gerritsen's unprotected, disruptive conduct. Thus, a total ban on this activity in these areas is unjustified.

11 Id. at 577.

12 Importantly, the regulation in Gerritsen did not erect a complete ban on expression in the 13 entire park; it only barred expression “in certain areas of the park (indicated by blue 14 demarcations on the pavement)” that the government claimed were very crowded. 994 F.2d at 15 573. Indeed, the Ninth Circuit explicitly acknowledged that the challenged regulation allowed 16 alternative avenues of communication because “Gerritsen could leaflet in other areas of the 17 park...” under the regulation. Id. at 577. Practically, the regulation in Gerritsen created speech 18 zones in the park where literature distribution was allowed and anti-speech zones in the park 19 where literature distribution was prohibited.
 20

22 Despite the existence of alternative avenues for communication within the park, the Ninth 23 Circuit still invalidated the regulation for insufficient tailoring because it banned activities 24 (literature distribution) that did not threaten the “calm, secure environment” or create 25 “congestion in these often crowded areas.” Id. at 577. Gerritsen is directly on point, for just like 26 here, the government broadly banned expression in some areas of a traditional public forum that

1 did not threaten the government's alleged interests. See also Saieg, 641 F.3d at 732 (invalidating 2 ban on literature distribution in festival despite ability of persons to distribute literature from a 3 booth located "in the central area" of the festival); Kuba, 387 F.3d at 859-62 (invalidating 4 regulation that limited expression, except conversation, to particular zones in traditional public 5 fora); ACLU of Nevada, 333 F.3d at 1106 (rejecting congestion rational as justification for 6 banning literature distribution in particular city sidewalk even though literature distribution 7 allowed on nearby sidewalks); Lederman, 291 F.3d at 39-40 (invalidating ban on literature 8 distribution in no-demonstration zone on sidewalk on Capitol grounds even though expression 9 was allowed in nearby lawn area on Capitol grounds); Roberts v. Haragan, 346 F.Supp.2d 853, 10 869-70 (N.D.Tex. 2004) (invalidating university regulation for lack of tailoring because it 11 limited students' expression outside of free speech zones).

14 Issaquah's ban should be invalidated for the same reasons: the ban is not narrowly 15 tailored to serve any significant government interest.

16 II. ASCHERL IS SUFFERING IRREPARABLE HARM

18 Without the requested injunction, Ascherl is continually prevented from exercising his 19 First Amendment rights in a traditional public forum. Ascherl desires to distribute literature at 20 the upcoming 2011 Salmon Days Festival and all future Festivals but the fear of punishment 21 prevents him from doing so. The loss of his constitutional right to speak is both actual and 22 imminent, and such loss results in irreparable injury. Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 373, 96 S.Ct.
 23 2673, 2690, 49 L.Ed.2d 547 (1976). See also Sammartano v. First Judicial District Court, 303

3 III. INJUNCTION WILL CAUSE NO HARM TO DEFENDANTS

4 Granting Ascherl’s request for injunctive relief will cause no harm to Defendants. They 5 have no legitimate interest in enforcing an unconstitutional policy. See, e.g., Newsom ex rel.
6 Newsom v. Albemarle County School Bd., 354 F.3d 249, 261 (4th Cir. 2003) (noting that 7 defendants are “in no way harmed by issuance of a preliminary injunction which prevents it 8 from enforcing a regulation, which, on this record, is likely to be found unconstitutional.”).

9 IV. PUBLIC INTEREST FAVORS INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

10 In this matter, the public interest will not be served by the continued discrimination 11 against Ascherl’s speech. Rather, the public is best served by preserving public discourse. See 12 Sammartano, 303 F.3d at 974 (“Courts considering requests for preliminary injunctions have 13 consistently recognized the significant public interest in upholding First Amendment 14 principles.”).
